

Grants from the Columbus Jewish Foundation’s Social Justice Fund seek to fund programs that:

- Address social injustice.
- Provide leadership to and funding for local Jewish social action programs.
- Advance positive relations between the local Jewish community and other groups.
- Educate local leaders regarding issues important to the Jewish community.

Certain projects may be eligible for multi-year funding, particularly if they are integral to the successful implementation of clearly defined strategic planning objectives. Continued funding is contingent upon measurable success in meeting the strategic objectives and available funds.

4. Proposals must support the agency mission, including any short-term and medium-term initiatives.

Funding for multi-year grants can be phased down over time at the discretion of the grant committee. Continued grant funding will be evaluated based on these criteria:
- a. program implementation is according to schedule;
  - b. measurable success in meeting the strategic objectives;
  - c. grantee submits a long-term funding plan and reports on the implementation of that plan with each request for continued funding, including communication with future funders following the Foundation grant period;
  - d. continued need for Foundation funding;
  - e. interest on the part of the Foundation to provide continued funding, and
  - f. available funding.
